IT'S MURDER

PETERSON'S TEAM VOWS TO APPEAL CONVICTION IN 3RD WIFE'S KILLING

Chicago Tribune

Retired Bolingbrook police officer Drew Peterson was found guilty Thursday of murdering his third wife, Kathleen Savio, the verdict eliciting a gasp from a packed Will County courthouse and ending a case that for years has received salacious tabloid news coverage.

A crowd of about 75 people awaiting the news outside the courthouse started buzzing as word spread. One person shouted, "Guilty!" and cheers erupted.

Savio's family and supporters hugged and cried along with witnesses who testified for the state. Peterson's attorney pledged to appeal.

"I knew it," said Savio's brother-in-law Mitch Doman. "Now I can go out there and say he's a murdering bastard. You can print that. You can put it in a headline."

Savio was found drowned on March 1, 2004, in her dry Bolingbrook bathtub, and her death was ruled an accident. But three years later, when Peterson's 23-year-old fourth wife, Stacy, disappeared, Savio's body was exhumed and her death was ruled a homicide.

Peterson, 58, was charged with Savio's murder in 2009. His case was delayed for years while the prosecution fought in court to introduce hearsay statements, many of which were eventually allowed at trial.

Mary Parks, the Joliet Junior College classmate of Savio who testified at trial, came out of courtroom beaming. "I just knew," she said. "I didn't doubt it. I just knew it would be this way. It was beautiful."

The verdict came after five weeks of testimony at the courthouse in Joliet, where prosecutors tried to show circumstantial and hearsay evidence proved Drew Peterson was guilty of killing. The defense team attempted to poke holes in the prosecution case and said Savio's death wasn't a murder at all, but a slip-and-fall accident.

Peterson's attorneys pointed to the lack of physical evidence, the inability by prosecutors to place Peterson at the scene, and conflicting opinions from forensic pathologists about how Savio, 40, died.

REACTION

Drew Peterson showed no emotion as the guilty verdict was read Thursday. He was shackled, said "Good job" to his attorneys and was led off. Sentencing has been set for Nov. 26. Kathleen Savio's family and supporters hugged and cried along with witnesses who testified for the state.

Case led to national media circus

Stacy Peterson's disappearance in 2007 triggered intense national media coverage with reporters camped in front of Drew Peterson's home for weeks on end. At the same time, Peterson, a former Bolingbrook police sergeant, gave interviews on national TV proclaiming his innocence. The case eventually became a made-for-TV movie starring Rob Lowe as Drew Peterson.

Savio's friends and family testified that he had threatened and attacked his third wife, Kathleen Savio, who was afraid for her life.

Defense attorneys tried to suggest such hearsay could not be trusted and some witnesses were either mistaken or lying and trying to capitalize on the publicity of the case.

While Judge Edward Burmila limited what could be said about Stacy Peterson during the trial, two witnesses testified that she told them information linking Drew Peterson to Savio's death.

The Rev. Neil Schori said Stacy Peterson told him that her husband came home late one night dressed in black with a bag of women's clothing that wasn't hers. Savio divorce attorney Harry Smith said Stacy Peterson called him to ask whether she could use information about Drew Peterson's alleged involvement in Savio's death to get more money in a divorce.

Stacy Peterson disappeared a few days after that conversation with Smith, in October 2007. Her husband remains the only suspect in her disappearance. He has not been charged.

Politics, drugs and rock 'n' roll

Nikki Lynette

redeye@tribune.com
@nikkilynette

If someone would have walked up to Jay-Z on the day he started his rap career and said, "One day the president of the United States will introduce you at your own music festival," I am sure Young Jov would not have believed it.

Yet nobody seemed to find this surprise unusual when it happened in Philadelphia during Labor Day weekend. Well, except the angry folks who vented online about President Obama "hanging out with an ex-drug dealer." Those folks seem to have forgotten that President George H.W. Bush once invited the "original gangster," Eazy-E, to the White House for grub back in 1991.

Let's keep it trill (that means "true" and "real," in case you didn't know): Musicians and politicians have always buddied up because popular entertainers have influence over their fans.

I'm a musician, so it's hard for me to view the influence we have on our fans as a bad thing when it is used responsibly. However, the whole politics/entertainment hybrid becomes weird once political views get confused with publicity stunts, and it makes people wonder if politicians and pop stars are slowly becoming the same thing.

Take, for example, Nicki Minaj's recent endorsement of Mitt Romney. Her line in a verse on Lil Wayne's new mixtape states, "I'm a Republican voting for Mitt Romney/ You lazy bitches are [bleeping] up the economy." Minaj is known for using sarcasm and humor in her raps, so nobody really knows if this was a serious political statement or a witty jab at Republicans. Personally, I think Minaj is entitled to her opinion and has a right to state it. Yet the comment drew criticism as bloggers and tweeters swore they would never support her music again.

It all makes me wonder: Why should artists' political opinions affect whether fans support them? If all a musician has to do to get attention is praise or criticize a politician, then doesn't that open the door for entertainers to use politics to get publicity? And if so, who's to blame—the artist who took advantage of an opportunity to gain more attention or the easily influenced people who fell for it?

Critics can accuse Obama of using stars such as Mick Jagger and Will.i.am to sway voters, but Romney's bromances with Ted Nugent and Kid Rock prove that he plans to go the same route. I mean, he invited Clint Eastwood onstage to debate invisible Obama, so Romney clearly sees the benefit of being endorsed by entertainers.

The same people who decry Obama for pal-ing around with "former drug dealer Jay-Z" are probably people who buy magazines published by ex-con Martha Stewart and pretend that Kid Rock's tour bus never got busted for drugs. And the same people who are strongly against Republicans will still tune in to watch Romney-loving Donald Trump's antics on "The Apprentice."

To say that entertainers and politicians should steer clear of each other sort of implies that entertainers aren't capable of using star power responsibly, which is ironic because politicians seem to know how to use it very well.

Don't get mad at me for stating my political views. After all, I'm only a musician. I'm just keeping it trill. REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR NIKKI LYNETTE, A CHICAGO NATIVE, IS AN INDIE RECORDING ARTIST WHOSE MUSIC APPEARS ON MTV, VH1, SHOWTIME AND MORE.

Were rap feud and homicide linked?

Chicago Tribune

At 18, Joseph Coleman was a little-known part of a generation of budding South Side rappers whose rhymes depicted everyday life in their crime-ridden neighborhoods.

Coleman, who went by the nickname Lil Jojo, recently had earned offers from two minor record labels for his songs, according to his family.

But after Lil Jojo was fatally shot Tuesday night while visiting his old Englewood neighborhood, police were looking into whether a war of words in the Chicago hip-hop community somehow was linked to his slaying.

Police also were investigating whether gang rivalries played a role in Coleman's death.

Across social media, recent tension was evident between Coleman and other rappers, including an associate of a rising star in Chicago's hip-hop scene. On Twitter and in a series of rap videos on YouTube, the two sides are shown dissing one another.

Coleman was riding on a bicycle when he was shot about 7:30 p.m. Tuesday near 69th Street and Princeton Avenue, not far from where he grew up and still recorded most of his music. Police said the gunman opened fire from a passing tan or gray car.

Joseph Coleman, also known as rapper Lil Jojo

Just four hours before his death, Coleman had posted a tweet that appeared to identify his location. "I'm on #69. I'm out here," it read.

Not long after Coleman was killed, the rising star now with Interscope Records appeared to taunt him in a tweet that read "It's sad cus ... Jojo wanted to be just like us #LMAO."

RedEye and the Tribune are not naming the rappers with whom Coleman was feuding because none of them has been charged with a crime.

Coleman recently released a song online, "Jhunna K" that mocked those rappers and their "300 squad," which police say refers to the Black Disciples street gang.

Investigators say Coleman was linked to the Brick Squad, a faction of a rival gang, the Gangster Disciples.

The shooting occurred in an area where the Black Disciples and the Gangster Disciples have been fighting.

Ald. Willie Cochran (20th) said gang members have told him they want to become the next big rapper.

"The motivation is each one of them wants to become rich," said Cochran, a former Chicago cop. "... It doesn't happen, but they're always trying."

LIVE FROM THE DNC

What's really going on at the Democratic National Convention? Matt Fruth, president of the Young Democrats of Illinois, is in Charlotte, N.C., as a delegate, and he's giving RedEye a behind-the-scenes peek at the event.

The energy the speakers delivered Wednesday—to delegates and visitors alike—still was palpable Thursday morning. We could have let former President Bill Clinton keep going all night with his amazingly rousing speech.

I'm writing this before President Obama's big address, and while there is some disappointment that the speech was moved from a giant stadium to the smaller Time Warner Arena due to weather concerns, everyone still is excited.

Volunteers and supporters organized watch parties at every restaurant that had a TV. Illinois House Speaker Michael Madigan made arrangements with our hotel to set up a projector and screen in a ballroom for our friends and families.

Everyone is getting decked out in their Democratic Party best to head over to the arena. While we won't have to stand out in the rain, we're all ready to trek through it to see President Obama talk. Here I go to watch him accept my nomination vote!

NOT DONE YET

PRESIDENT OBAMA LAYS OUT HIS CASE FOR 4 MORE YEARS

7 CHARLOTTE, N.C. President Obama asked Americans on Thursday for patience in rebuilding the weak economy as he appealed for a new term in office and defiantly rejected Republican Mitt Romney's proposals to restore growth.

In accepting the presidential nomination at the Democratic National Convention, Obama gave a more down-to-earth follow-up to his 2008 "hope and change" message.

"America, I never said this journey would be easy, and I won't promise that now," he said. "Yes our path is harder—but it leads to a better place."

Locked in a close fight with Romney, Obama faces the challenge of recapturing the magic of his historic campaign of four years ago and generating enthusiasm among voters who are weary of economic hardship and persistent high unemployment.

His nationally televised address was his best chance yet in this campaign to connect with millions of Americans.

Obama argued that his actions, such as the auto bailout, are paying off and dismissed proposals by Romney to create jobs.

Casting Romney as uncaring of ordinary Americans, he accused the Republican of just wanting to reward the wealthy with tax cuts, deregulate big banks and let energy companies write a policy for more oil drilling.

Obama told Americans they face two starkly different paths in choosing between him and Romney in the Nov. 6 election. He said his way may be hard but will bring economic renewal if given more time.

"The truth is, it will take more than a few years for us to solve challenges that have built up over decades," Obama said.

OFFICE REPS?

YES, WORKING OUT AT WORK CAN BE DISCREET

MCT

We do a lot of our everyday routines in funny places. A few people drink coffee in the shower. Some eat breakfast when running out the door. Others put on makeup as they speed toward work. So, what about exercising in the office?

Sure, breaking a sweat at your desk may seem a little farfetched, but why? It actually makes a lot of sense. Working out at work can make you less stressed. It can help boost your energy level. And, most importantly, it can help sculpt the body you've been dreaming of, which should help catch the attention of that attractive new hire.

But what are you going to do without any gym equipment? Mark Lauren, author of "You Are Your Own Gym: The Bible of Bodyweight Exercises for Men and Women" (Light of New Orleans Publishing, $14.95), says that your own bodyweight is all you need to get a great workout. So you just lie down in the middle of the office and do some pushups? Lauren says there are more discrete ways to get ripped in your work clothes. Take the hand press, for instance. Put your hands out in front of your chest and press your palms together. Hold for 10 seconds, rest and repeat eight times. With each set, you'll bring your hands slightly farther away from your chest until your elbows are completely extended for the last one. No one in your office will be the wiser.

"The best exercises are those that engage many muscles at once," Lauren said. "One such exercise that can be done anywhere is the bodyweight squat. Squeezing in just five sets of 10 repetitions throughout the day will make a difference."

But a bodyweight squat? Isn't that a little noticeable?

"Find ways to sneak in some exercise when no one is around," Lauren said. "Maybe there is an empty stairwell that you can use on the way in or out of the office each day."

Lauren has a method he calls "Ins & Outs." Every time you walk past a certain, discrete place, do a quick exercise. This can add up quickly. Imagine if you did 10 bodyweight squats every time you went to get water or went to the bathroom. In almost no time, you'd be making a huge difference.

Gripping about your boss? That's totally a first-world problem

Los Angeles Times

Only 27 percent of people older than age 15 globally are working more than 30 hours a week for an employer, according to a new report from Gallup.

The percentage is highest in North America, where it's 41 percent. But in sub-Saharan Africa, just 12 percent of adults work full time for a boss other than themselves.

The European Union has 32 percent of its population in such a situation. In the Middle East and North Africa, it's 18 percent.

That excludes those who are self-employed, working part time, unemployed or out of the workforce. The measure, according to Gallup, "provides a more accurate picture of the true economic situation in a country because it is not affected by changes in the workforce participation rate."

"When jobs are scarce, people may drop out of the workforce," according to Gallup. "This can actually lead to an improvement in unemployment rates, even though fewer people are working." By that gauge, only Sweden, Belarus and Israel had more than half of their adult populations working full time for an employer.

The U.S. has 41 percent. The official national unemployment rate is 8.3 percent—representing the proportion of people unemployed but actively looking for jobs compared with all individuals still in the labor force.

One measure of the job market this week showed employers still skittish. Help-wanted ads online dipped by 262,000 in July and August in the largest two-month drop since January-February '09, according to the Conference Board.

Brandon Marshall
US PRESSWIRE

★ OFFENSE ★

Lance Louis offensive lineman

Alshon Jeffery and Brandon Marshall. Big guys that can go up and catch the ball, speed, route runners. I never really seen Brandon Marshall play in person until the preseason, but it's going to be exciting. I looked at Jeffery when he played in college and I liked him as a player, so I'm excited he's on our team and I'm looking forward to what he's going to bring.

Eric Weems return man

Matt Forte. I've seen him on film a couple times, running the ball real hard, making exciting plays. I'm really excited to see him get out there and run the rock.

D.J. Moore cornerback

Marshall. It's challenging [covering him in practice]. I like to guard the best, and when you guard him you can pretty much say how you would do against any good receiver in the league, because he's one of the best.

Tim Jennings cornerback

I would say Alshon Jeffery. I'm excited to see him play, to see what he brings to the team as a young guy, and to see the potential that he has in his career while he's in the NFL.

Julius Peppers
GETTY IMAGES

★ DEFENSE ★

Robbie Gould kicker

Julius Peppers. He's always fun to watch. He's one of the most athletic guys in the National Football League at his position, and maybe even leaguewide. He's a big dude, so it's fun to watch him make plays.

Adam Podlesh punter

One guy I'm always excited to see is Peanut Tillman. Just because I feel like whenever he's in on a tackle, we have a chance of getting the ball back. He's probably the best person I've ever seen at punching out a ball of a receiver or anyone he's tackling.

Tim Jennings cornerback

I'm excited to see Kelvin Hayden, man, to see how he's going to fit in there, and to see how he helps the team win. I think he's a great player, and he's a playmaker, so we're gonna try to see how we can get him on the field.

Blake Costanzo linebacker

My man Urlacher. Yeah, growing up, you know, "It's Brian Urlacher." Playing video games with him. Shoot, man, just to have a locker beside him is unbelievable. Just to see the way he plays the game, and Lance [Briggs] too, man. They come to practice every day, and they work on just the little things.

Devin Hester
GETTY IMAGES FILE

★ SPECIAL TEAMS ★

Henry Melton defensive lineman

I still like Devin [Hester]. Devin's my dude. I like to see him punt return, do all sorts of crazy things when he's back there.

Eric Weems return man

Of course, the man himself! Number 23, Devin Hester. You know? I've studied him when we game-planned against him. Just excited to see him up close in person and to be out there with him.

Adam Podlesh punter

I'm going to say Blake Costanzo. He was part of a very good punt coverage unit in San Francisco, and he brings a lot to the table. He's a very explosive guy. He doesn't take plays off. He busts his butt. He's very, very talented, and he's very strong, and for a guy of his stature he's quick. He's got a high motor. It's fun to watch him get pumped up in special teams play and take a lot of pride in it.

Kelvin Hayden cornerback

Robbie Gould. It's just exciting to see him being consistent and knock down every field goal this year that he comes out to attempt.

EVEN THE BEARS CAN'T CONTAIN THEIR EXCITEMENT FOR THE NEW SEASON

By Jack M Silverstein | FOR REDEYE

RedEye asked the Bears to single out which teammates they're most excited to see on the field—one each on offense, defense and special teams, plus one rookie. This team is fired up!

SUPER MEN?

★ ROOKIES ★

Lance Louis offensive line

I'm gonna go with Alshon [Jeffery]. He's a playmaker, you know? He's cool under pressure, and I feel like he just feels like he belongs, and that's a big thing for a rookie coming in. He's got all the tools and it's just about him using them in the right ways.

Patrick Mannelly long snapper

Alshon Jeffery. I haven't seen a rookie receiver come in and be as refined as he is, and all of his skills that I've seen, he's pretty impressive.

Kelvin Hayden cornerback

Shea McClellin. He's going to force the quarterback to get rid of the ball ... to disrupt him and make mistakes. It's only going to make us better in the secondary.

Henry Melton defensive lineman

Hmmm ... rookie ... [pauses] ... I don't know. Who are our rookies? [Laughs.] ... Oh yeah, my boy! McClellin. He's been getting so many reps with the first team, so I forgot he was even a rookie. He's just an all-around good player. He plays the run well, good pass rusher, very low center of gravity. He stays low. Very quick. I definitely want to see what he does against the big tackles in the league.

Bears vs. Indianapolis

Noon Sunday, CBS

Alshon Jeffery
JOSE M. OSORIO/
THIBAULT FILE

Behold: Marshall madness

Jack M Silverstein

@ReadJack

Patrick Mannelly is a 6-foot-5-inch, 15-year NFL veteran who has seen it all. Yet ask the Bears long snapper to pick one offensive teammate he is most excited to watch, and he starts giggling like a 5-foot-6-inch Bears junkie who spends Sundays on a couch with a beer and a laptop, just like the rest of us.

"That's easy,"

he says immediately. "Brandon Marshall." Mannelly is a massive man—if you were at a restaurant and he walked in, all heads would turn. Except, of course, if Marshall had walked in 30 minutes earlier.

"It's just everything. He's a complete receiver. I've never played with a receiver that has the ability with everything he can do. It's that simple, seriously," he says with a laugh, as if to say, Are you seriously asking me this question? You have eyes, don't you? I mean, just LOOK at him.

Again and again Marshall's teammates regress to slobbering fan boys when asked the question. Defensive lineman Henry Melton nearly swoons singing Marshall's praises. Punter Adam Podlesh grins while speaking about Marshall's training camp. Defensive backs Craig Steltz and Major Wright say he's made them better. Not the team, them.

"He's just a freak," linebacker Blake Costanzo says, laughing. "We got a lot of freaks on this team that are, I like to joke, not humans. It's fun to see the not-human guys perform."

There are lots of reasons to be excited about the 2012 Bears, not-human or otherwise. Devin Hester's return chops are matched by Eric Weems. Stephen Paea, arguably the team's fourth-best defensive lineman, once benched 225 pounds 49 times. The rookies have won the respect of the veterans. Their backup quarterback has started 70 NFL games.

But none impresses like Marshall, whose six-year NFL career would place him first in Bears history in receptions (494), first in receiving yards (6,247) and fourth in touchdown catches (34).

Or, as cornerback DJ. Moore puts it, "We never had a receiver like him."

Bearing down with...

CHARLES TILLMAN

The cornerback knows team history—and might make some of his own

By Jack M Silverstein | FOR REDEYE

Charles Tillman came to the Bears in the 2003 draft as a relative unknown. Nine years later he is a Pro Bowl cornerback, special teams ace, fan favorite and fumble-forcing master. RedEye spoke with him about his first opening day, his 10th opening day and everything in between.

Charles Tillman: I didn't have any idea what team was going to draft me, or even if I was going to get drafted. But the Bears picked me up. I knew about the '85 Bears a little bit, but as far as the history, the titles, George Halas, things like that, I didn't know anything about it.

[VP of communications] Scott Hagel made all the rookies take a Bears history class—you know, "What does the GSH stand for on the jersey?" "George Halas ... got drafted into the war." Just gave us a little bit of history on the team and the organization.

Do you remember your first opening day?

I don't. It might have been an away game? Oh, San Francisco. We played San Francisco, now that I think about it. I think we ended up losing. T.O. [Terrell Owens] beat me on a third down. It wasn't one of my best games as a rookie [laughs], but I didn't start so I didn't really get in that much.

You forced a fumble.

I did? ... I don't even remember the score. Obviously I don't even remember my own stats. I just remember T.O. beat me on a third down, something like that.

The second game, [editor's note: it actually was the third game] we played Green Bay. It was the opening of the new Soldier Field. First time we'd been there, seeing the stadium, the locker room. It was packed. It was Green Bay. That was when I realized, "Wow, the oldest rivalry in football." That was when it sunk in.

What sort of research have you done on the Bears since that point?

[Looks at Brandon Marshall, who is posing on the grass for a photographer, one knee on the ground and a football under his arm.] What are you doing? Really? Are you in high school, taking photos?

He's very focused.

I know.

So did you study the Bears?

No, nothing like that. Just over the years I would learn new things here and there.

Do you know how your career numbers stack up franchise-wise?

I don't. I think they're up there. I think my name will just get tossed in the hat with a bunch of other great players who have come here over the years.

Tillman

What's the difference going into your 10th opening day as opposed to your first?

Nothing. Still get butterflies. Still excited. Still nervous. You know, I'm happy. It's a good day. Excitement. Trying to focus, lock in, things like that. It never changes for me.

So after 10 years, what is it that is special about being a Chicago Bear?

Just the history, the legacy, what this franchise and organization is and what they stand for. They stand for good quality guys. They don't care about how great a player you are. They want to know how good of a person you are. They take that all into account when they draft you.

1 Make a prediction for the Bears' season.	Colt Truth: Chicago will not become The Indy City this weekend.	The Bears' season will soon meet a tall dark stranger and they will raise 53 beautiful children.	Jay Cutler will have a sour look on his face at some point.	In an upset that no one sees coming, Cap Boso leads the league in catches.	Looks like 11-5. Feels like 11-5. Smells like 11-5. Please watch out for 7-9!
2 The Bears are the eighth most valuable NFL franchise. How can they improve that?	When you finish 8-8, No. 8 makes cents.	Whack the first seven franchises. I know a guy who knows a guy. Call me.	Move to New York?	Toss garbage on the front lawns of the top seven?	By selling themselves to a Russian oil billionaire. That's where the real money is.
3 How excited are you for the Bears' season opener?	Meh, I'll be in New Orleans at the Saints game. "Gulf clap"	My nipples' nipples' nipples are erect. (For those scoring at home, that's three nipples.)	On a scale of "Ron Swanson" to "Tom Cruise," I'd say I'm at "Honey Boo Boo."	The Bears are my Week 1 suicide pool pick, so I am technically on suicide watch.	On a scale of 1 to 100? A rock solid 76.
4 How did Lovie Smith go about losing 29 pounds?	It was all water weight from last season: Tears.	He finally pulled Jerry Angelo's head out of his ass.	I bet Martz's offensive playbook was pretty heavy.	He stopped eating during coach's challenge timeouts.	He sat down and thought about the offensive line. And then couldn't sleep or eat.
5 Andrew Luck is to the Indianapolis Colts as Urban Meyer is to the Ohio State Buckeyes. How did you get that Luck?	... my golf clubs are to my golf game.	... Bible-verse eye black is to Tim Tebow.	... bourbon is to Jimmy's liver. Costly yet so, so worth it.	... Peyton Manning was to the Indianapolis Colts.

Bears look good—and that's scary

SACKED AGAIN

Bag Boy

redeyesports
@tribune.com

All the pieces are in place, Brian Urlacher is back practicing, and the Indianapolis Colts come to town to kick off the 2012 season. Everybody happy.

Big-time receivers in the house, Matt Forte and Jay Cutler happy ... new offensive coaches who aren't offensive, everybody happy.

Great special teams as always, offensive line is OK, everybody happy.

Except I'm not happy. You're telling me a GM comes in from out of nowhere and in a matter of months addresses every major need, almost overnight seems to modernize the franchise?

This can't be. This is Chicago. There's always, always a hitch.

Colts is a win. I say we beat Detroit twice. They're better, but so are we.

We beat Minnesota twice. We split with Green Bay (losing there).

We lose at San Francisco, at Dallas, at Jacksonville, at home vs. Houston.

Wins vs. St. Louis, Tennessee, Seattle and Arizona.

Add it up, it's a very pedestrian 11-5. Nothing earth shattering. Green Bay looks better than 11-5, though. Nightmare scenario: Cedric Benson finally fulfills his potential against the Bears. Thanks again, Jerry Angelo.

Other bold predictions: Midway through the season, Allen Pinkett will say the Bears need more thugs. Bears fans say "Hey, we had Benson and he blew!"

Fans will be really bored not having a No. 3 QB to say "Let's try him!"

The inventor of "NFL power rankings" used throughout sports websites will be sued for fraud. They mean nothing, people.

In an effort to help J'Marcus Webb, Bears will petition the league to start a 12th man on offense, a tackle/tight end combo player to help with blocking and receiving. Entire league catches on.

The Detroit Lions will use stupidity and thuggery to miss the playoffs. Book it. I don't care how good they are.

Pundits everywhere will be shocked (again!) to discover Philadelphia just isn't that good.

After Cam Newton blows by Brian Urlacher in Week 8, Urlacher heard mumbling, "Man, I may actually be 34!"

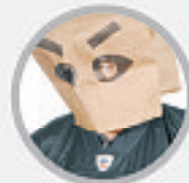

And after Green Bay beats the Bears in the NFC championship game, Lovie Smith heard mumbling, "Maybe we did need that left tackle after all."

BAG BOY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

HOT PITCHER Darth Vader

The Sith lord will throw out a ceremonial first pitch before Saturday's White Sox game; it's "Star Wars Day" at the Cell. The team will donate $5 to Stand Up to Cancer for each Star Wars ticket package sold, which can be purchased at whitesox.com/starwars. As for what pitch Vader throws, we bet it's a forceball.

THE MOUTHWATCH

It was a great opportunity and turning it down was really hard. But broadcasting is a better choice for my family and ... opportunities like this don't come around often."

HANGING WITH MR. COOPER

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais
» @tribune.com
» @mattpais

Bradley Cooper comes to life in thoughtful 'The Words'

It's been years, maybe around the time of "Wedding Crashers," since the once-charismatic

Bradley Cooper ("The Hangover") truly held the screen rather than merely existing on it as someone who happens to look like a leading man.

The drought is over. In "The Words," Cooper captures Rory Jansen's outer relief and inner stress as he achieves commercial and critical success by claiming another writer's work as his own. It almost seems like a victimless crime; Rory finds old pages in a worn-down bag that his wife (Zoe Saldana) buys him in Paris, and the story, without any clue about its origins, contains all the brilliance and promise Rory cannot create himself. Who could turn down a shortcut to fame and fortune?

The Words

Compared to the bland, familiar trajectory of "Limitless," Cooper's other movie about a writer cutting corners, "The Words" elegantly crafts a story within a story within a story. Rory's actually the character in a book by unimpressive writer Clay Hammond (Dennis Quaid), who's reluctant to confront his own past despite the obvious affections of a Columbia grad student (Olivia Wilde).

Clay's tale slows the pace of "The Words" when an old man (Jeremy Irons) helps Rory understand at length where the mysterious, now-plagiarized work came from, and the film takes a long time to draw out writers' high emotional stakes as they succeed or fail in bringing something that may or may not be real to life on the page.

Co-writers/co-directors Brian Klugman and Lee Sternthal opt for an open-ended conclusion that is a bit of a cop-out to the question of how people can move on from big mistakes. The filmmakers also traffic in fortune cookie-esque lines about choices, consequences and the past without considering the way controversy often helps book sales, rather than hurting them.

Yet "The Words" confronts the devastation felt when you fear you are incapable of becoming the person you always thought you would be, and delves into how easy it could be to cut a corner to ensure a hobby becomes a profession. Consequently, falling in love with the page becomes a romance almost as tragic as one built on deception, though both seem to have the same result: loneliness that finds no secure future in living a lie.

Bradley Cooper and Zoe Saldana in 'The Words.'

Look for Oscar-worthy material

His next movie, "Silver Linings Playbook," is already the subject of Oscar buzz. He plays a former psychiatric patient who moves back in with his parents in director David O. Russell's movie, which opens in November.

Use your cachet on small quality projects

The newly minted power player stars in "The Words" and has a supporting role as a hot-headed bank robber in buddy Dax Shepard's "Hit & Run," both released this year.

2 words: Action movie

The handsome leading man appropriately played Face in the 2010 reboot "The A-Team."

Score a ginormous box-office hit

The actor vaulted into the big time wreaking comic havoc in 2009's Las Vegas bachelor party getaway "The Hangover."

Become a celebrity journalism favorite

The handsome Cooper has appeared on the cover of Us Weekly and was a People cover guy after being named the magazine's 2011 sexiest man alive.

Act on Broadway with a superstar

Cooper played opposite Julia Roberts in 2006 in "Three Days of Rain," which also featured his "Wet Hot American Summer" co-star Rudd.

Land a supporting part in a big-screen hit

As the smug fiancé of Rachel McAdams, Cooper was a worthy adversary for love-struck Owen Wilson in 2005's "Wedding Crashers."

Start movie career with indie credibility

Cooper had a role in 2001's "Wet Hot American Summer," a quirky comedy that's become a cult hit and included future stars such as Paul Rudd, Amy Poehler and Elizabeth Banks.

THE HIGH RISE OF BRADLEY COOPER

How does a talented, versatile actor cement his status as an A-list star? The upward trajectory of Bradley Cooper's career offers a few lessons. DETROIT FREE PRESS

Funnier than ‘Bridesmaids’

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» @mattpais

Pretend for a moment that “Bridesmaids” never existed. You’d totally go for a hilarious comedy about bridesmaids, right?

OK, now remember that “Bridesmaids” existed. Guess what: “Bachelorette” is funnier. The new movie, based on writer-director Leslye Headland’s play written well before the Kristen Wiig flick became one of 2011’s big stories, may lose some originality points but easily compensates with laughs. So many laughs.

I watched a stream of “Bachelorette” (which recently hit No. 1 on the iTunes on-demand chart, something that had never been done by a movie before it was released in theaters) at the office, and I’m shocked no one around me asked what I was watching. I don’t normally sit at my desk and just randomly crack up every 30 seconds.

If we’re going by their high school names, “Bachelorette” tells the story of Bitch Face (Kirsten Dunst), Twat (Isla Fisher) and Slut (Lizzy Caplan), the maid of honor and two bridesmaids, respectively, for Pig Face (Rebel Wilson of, yes, “Bridesmaids”). The women, actually named Regan, Katie, Gena and Becky, may not want people to call them by their nicknames anymore. Yet as Regan, Katie and Gena accidentally destroy Becky’s wedding dress during a stunt that shows how much they’ve enjoyed feeling superior to their overweight friend all these years, “Bachelorette” touches on lingering insecurities and the familiar but still-ripe notion of feeling resentful toward friends and yourself.

That resentment is blame for a defiant adulthood that hasn’t turned out to be as happy as expected—though the ladies get things going to varying degrees with groomsmen played by James Marsden, Adam Scott and Kyle Bornheimer. The sharp-edged jokes help re-invigorate the concept of a movie about the wild night. Ultimately this one’s a story about the things we do to make ourselves feel better, even when we know they’re wrong.

Big message/relationship insights/yadda yadda. “Bachelorette,” which does over-rely on pop culture references, wouldn’t stick if it weren’t hilarious. (It’s also funnier than both “Hangover” movies combined, by the way.) I could list dozens of fantastic lines, often shot like poison darts, but that would deplete the spark that comes from a script this quick and unexpected.

“I just realized that the guy I slept with sucks,” mutters Gena, Caplan’s dryness perfectly timed to Gena putting on the guy’s Jack Johnson T-shirt. “I gotta take this; it’s work,” says Katie, explaining why she has to pick up the phone—despite the fact that she’s actually at work.

OK, just wanted to mention those, which of course better connect when delivered to perfection by the standouts of the phenomenal cast. The rest are yours to enjoy.

Alternate reality masks true feelings

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

Greek writer-director Giorgos Lanthimos' original, unsettling "Dogtooth" was just about the best movie I saw in 2010. Track it down, please.

Lanthimos' latest, "Alps," also constructs a different version of reality. In "Dogtooth," it was children raised away from society, taught different meanings to words and different standards of behavior. In "Alps," it's a group of people (including Aggeliki Papoulia of "Dogtooth") who work part-time as replacements for the deceased, stepping in and somewhat stiffly re-enacting events in the lost ones' lives as a way of easing the grieving process.

Part of what made "Dogtooth" so stunningly weird yet convincing was the isolated nature of its alternate world. It's a shame that in "Alps," Lanthimos takes for granted the desirability of the service being provided, when in actuality most people would surely balk at accepting a weak impersonation of a lost loved one. The film, however, could make an interesting companion piece to "The Imposter," the recent documentary about a family that believed a stranger to be their son who had disappeared more than three years earlier.

Repeated comments in "Alps" about people's fixation on their favorite actors reinforce our interest in both entertainment over bad news and the intrigue of people pretending to be someone other than themselves. Of course, sometimes we're only fixated on the movie star because of who they are, not who they play, one of many questions the movie neglects to address.

Lanthimos' vision still compels and challenges, but "Alps" offers a big idea in place of a better movie.

The Head in 'Toys in the Attic'

Not to be confused with 'Toy Story'

Knowing that Forrest Whitaker and Evanston-raised Joan Cusack lend their voices to "Toys in the Attic" actually tells you almost nothing about the film. The stars sound unrecognizable in this Czech Republic-made, stop-motion animated feature, which easily earns a capital-W for weird.

Sorta like a dream "Toy Story" might have after experimenting in ways that could lead to arrest, "Toys in the Attic" chronicles a team effort to save kidnapped doll Buttercup (Vivian Schilling) from the clutches of The Head (Douglas Urbanski). And by team effort, I mean cooperation between a teddy bear (Whitaker), a mouse scientist (Cusack), the always rhyming Sir Handsome (Cary Elwes) and Laurent (Marcelo Tubert), a clay meatball-looking thing with a pencil nose and bottle cap hat.

The movie's Czech-language version won the grand prize at the New York International Children's Film Festival, assumedly in praise of its bizarre visuals more than its ordinary, meandering story. "Toys in the Attic" falls well below the inventive, handmade achievements of "ParaNorman" but above "The Secret World of Arrietty," whose secret world is just a smaller version of our own. In "Toys in the Attic," cats don disguises to mess with train tracks and monkey EM'Ts tend to wounds suffered by inflatable dragons. Memorable? Not really. Trippy? Dude.

"Toys in the Attic" opens Friday at the AMC South Barrington.

You may assume “Samsara” is Latin for “movie I don’t plan to see” or “some random documentary I’ve never heard of.”

Based on buzz, I hoped it would stand for “gorgeous, odd experience that’s more memorable than something like ‘Hit and Run.’”

The joke’s on me. Don’t get me wrong; the wordless doc “Samsara” (which actually refers to the world’s constant flow) looks lovely. Director Ron Fricke shot 70 mm footage on five continents over five years, capturing everything from cows being milked to pigs being split open to prisoners dancing to ornate chandeliers and hand-painted ceilings.

Rarely do the juxtapositions have anything to say. Time-lapse footage of subways and Costco pretty much boil down to, “We’re busy, aren’t we?” and notions of conservative versus open-minded dress in various cultures should be news to nobody. As for depictions of breastfeeding and highways, bullet manufacturing and

!!! Samsara

Asian bikini dance contests, the movie just presents a lot of stuff and leaves it at that.

Certainly some will be hypnotized by the film’s music-accented rhythms and slow drifts over landscapes, whether smoke clouds over a volcano or the sun passing over a mountain.

It’s worth considering some of the intersections between the natural and man-made worlds, and what might make someone want to be buried in a gun-shaped coffin.

Yet “Samsara” lacks any sense of the who, when, where and why of its imagery. That results in a superficial film (mildly reminiscent of the doc “Babies”) that encourages us to judge people and places by their covers. I prefer a raw, informed presentation than a film that invites us to be casual observers through a beautiful lens.

The Five-Year Engagement

An engaged couple has trouble getting to the altar. Jason Segel stars. Director Nicholas Stoller, who co-wrote the script with Segel, has created a jumbled mess of a film. At times it wants to be a wild comedy. Then it quickly shifts to deep conversations about love and commitment. Stoller's inability to blend these comedy and drama aspects leaves both parts a mess. The film is the marriage of dreary characters with a script that's neither funny nor poignant. This is a union that feels as if it runs a half-decade long. "The Five-Year Engagement" might have worked if it had a faster pace, more focus on the comedy, a better leading pair and a stronger plot device. As it is, divorce yourself of any ideas of seeing it.

Extras: DVD and Blu-ray include an unrated version that is seven minutes longer than the theatrical release. Other extras include deleted, extended and alternate scenes, a blooper reel and audio commentary. RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

Nobody Walks

Ry Russo-Young's low-key drama—co-written with "Girls" sensation Lena Dunham—stars Olivia Thirlby as a young art filmmaker who comes to L.A. to work on an installation loop with a big league Hollywood sound man (John Krasinski), who's the husband of a family friend (Rosemarie DeWitt). The leads flirt while playing around with different possibilities for sound effects, which allows Russo-Young to meditate on the artificiality of film and relationships. The big problem with "Nobody Walks" is that it haphazardly jumps from vignette to vignette. What this movie does have is some insight into the point at which pretense becomes something else and flirtation shades into something destructive.

NOEL MURRAY, LOS ANGELES TIMES

Homeland: The Complete First Season

The excellent drama, which begins a second season Sept. 30 on Showtime, is a twisty tale of trust and truth starring Damian Lewis as a Marine sergeant back in the U.S. after prolonged captivity in Afghanistan. While he appears to be a hero, one CIA agent (Claire Danes) needs to be sure—and she is not always careful about her methods. While you can pretty much figure out where a lot of shows are going, "Homeland" kept me guessing and made its characters as compelling as the plot.

Extras: Deleted scenes, a making-of piece and a prologue to the second season. RICH HELDENFELS, AKRON BEACON JOURNAL

2 Broke Girls: The Complete First Season

Although the series fell into some comedy ruts in the final episodes of the first season, there are still enough laughs on the menu for this show about two waitresses from opposite sides of the track who work and live together. Beth Behrs continues to play the comedy way over the top. And the writers have gotten a little lazy with the street-tough character played by Kat Dennings, who has gone from telling jokes about dealing with a hard life to those of a sexual nature. But these women are still the most energetic team in any TV comedy. A strong supporting cast helps.

Extras: "2 Girls Going 4 Broke" featurette, alternate jokes reel. RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

Dozens of bestselling young adult novels have been optioned by entertainment companies and could be making their way to the big screen over the next couple of years. One such story is "Tiger's Curse," a book by Colleen Houck. Paramount, Disruption Entertainment and Ineffable Pictures are priming the story of a 17-year-old who falls in love with a shape-shifting tiger she meets at a circus for a possible 2015 release as a film. Here are several other titles that could beat or follow "Tiger's Curse" to theaters.

Battered 'Wallander' just can't escape job

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

✉ cwagner@tribune.com
✉ @showpatrol

The new season of the detective series "Wallander" opens with a shocking murder, but the real stunner involves Kenneth Branagh's character, Kurt Wallander: He actually smiles.

In "An Event in Autumn," the first of three new films airing on PBS "Masterpiece Mystery," the depressed Swedish detective with perpetual stubble has found a refuge from the horrors of his job. He's moved in to a quaint country home with his girlfriend, Vanja (Saskia Reeves), who he met in the last outing of the series, 2010's "The Fifth Woman," and her son.

He's so at peace here that he leaves the investigation of a pregnant Polish woman's death at his doorstep. Yet within minutes, their domestic bliss evaporates when Wallander's dog digs up a skeleton under the blackberry bush in the backyard.

"Is it fate?" Wallander moans to Vanja. She assures him it isn't, but fans of author Henning Mankell's novels, and this series based upon them, know better. Wallander, whose psyche already is ripped to shreds by what he witnesses on the job, can never escape that torment.

"I'm who I am because of what I do," he later admits.

No doubt. Wallander may hate how the job dooms everything else in his life, but his commitment to it is what makes him such a good detective. He and his partner,

Wallander III: An Event in Autumn
8 p.m. Sunday, WTTW

Ann-Britt Hoglund (Sarah Smart), soon are sucked into an investigation involving missing women and forced prostitution, but his obsessive approach leads to a fatal mistake that will tear at him in the upcoming films, "The Dogs of Riga" (Sept. 16) and "Before the Frost" (Sept. 23).

These are difficult episodes to watch, partly because the gruesome nature of the crimes can feel like so many punches to the gut, but mostly because of the emotional toll they exact on the lead character. You truly feel for Wallander.

Branagh once again is magnificent in the role, making the flawed detective hugely appealing. He seems hopelessly overwhelmed by the constant barrage of bad news and worse atrocities around him. Yet Branagh reveals beneath Wallander's rumpled persona hints of the resolve and basic decency that keep him going.

The relentless bleakness would be my only quibble with the series; one doesn't often choose to feel as battered as the characters on screen. But you won't be able to turn it off.

At least the forensic pathologist in "An Event in Autumn" retains his sense of humor. "Thought you were trying not to take your work home with you," he jokes when the body is found in the detective's yard.

By then Wallander's smile has disappeared and the familiar, painful yet beautiful desolation once again smothers him—and our screens.

BEAR DOWN, BOTTOMS UP

Get a jump on Bears game days with beer, bloody marys & stadium shuttles

By Lisa Arnett

REDEYE

Freshly laundered Urlacher jersey? Check. Insatiable craving for bloody marys and early-morning beers? Check and check. Sounds like you're ready for Bears season to begin. Local bars are pulling out all the stops when it comes to game day entertainment this season, from one-buck mimosas to all-you-can-eat brunches to ticket giveaways. Here's how to make the most out of Bears football-watching on Sundays.

For beer drinkers sick of bucket specials

A pizzeria chain might be the last place you'd expect to see a decent craft brew lineup, but recently revamped Gino's East Sports Bar (521 S. Dearborn St. 312-939-1818) is the perfect post-game hangout for Bears fans craving local beer rather than the standard bucket o' bottles. Picks from 5 Rabbit, Flossmoor Station, Metropolitan and Two Brothers are on draft, and Revolution Brewery drafts are $4 on Saturdays, Sundays and Mondays.

For fans seeking a free ride

Meet the crew at South Loop bar Cactus Bar & Grill (404 S. Wells St. 312-922-3830) to hop a free shuttle to Soldier Field on home game days. The bus runs start 90 minutes before kickoff and then return to the bar for 60 minutes after the game's end. Gear up before you go with $5 bloody marys or kick back after with $5 appetizers after 5 p.m.

For freebie fiends

Listen up for ticket and tailgate package giveaways during Bears games at Bull & Bear (431 N. Wells St. 312-527-5973). The River North sport hub also has super-sized its drink specials: Sip $5 22-ounce drafts of Stella Artois, Bud Light, Hoegaarden and Goose Island 312 or Green Line. Game time cocktails such as the Free Agent (organic vodka, mint, lime juice and lemon-lime soda) get the same 22-ounce treatment for $6.

For game day brunchers

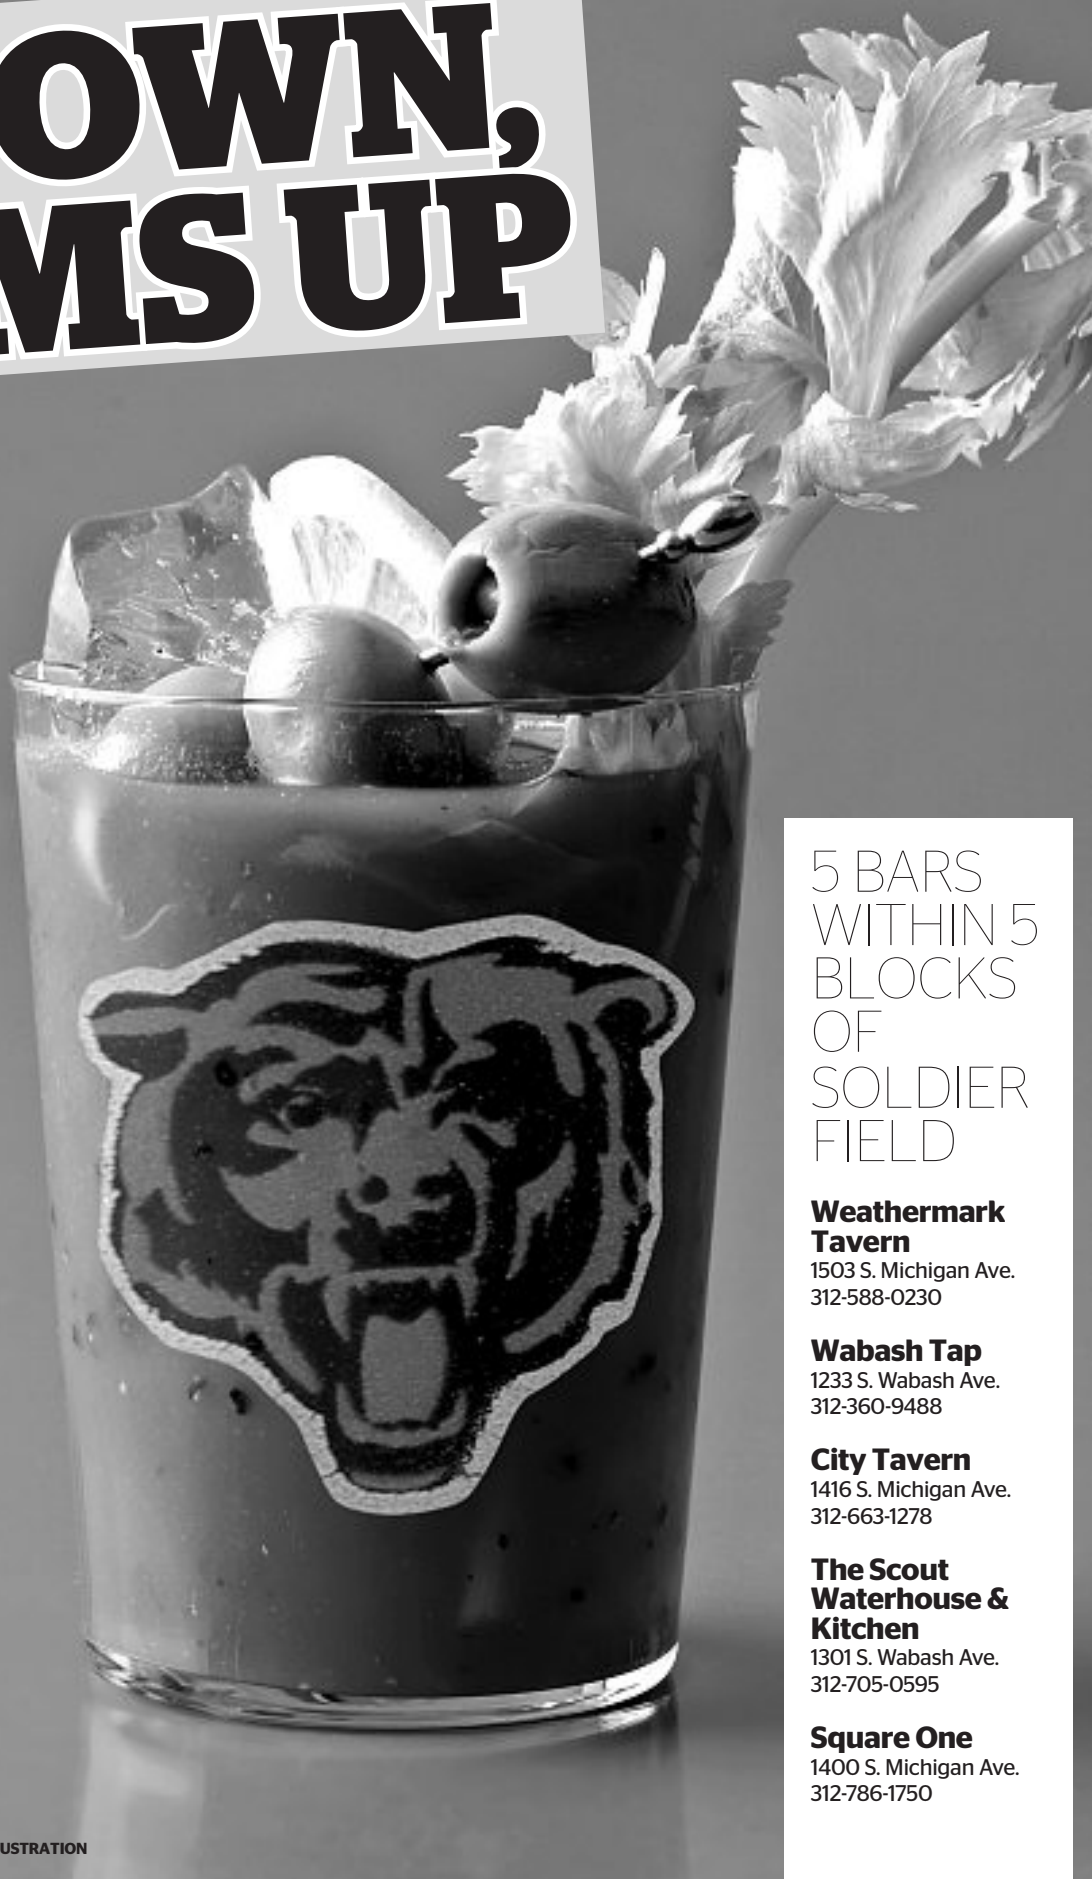

South Loop bar Jimmy Green's (825 S. State St. 312-386-9000) serves a $7.95 brunch menu from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. with choices such as a breakfast burrito or sausage, peppers and eggs. Jumbo bloody marys ($7) are garnished with a skewer that is almost a meal in itself: salami, provolone, pepperoncini, pickles, green olives and celery.

For frugal fans

Hungry sports fans can eat their money's worth at the $11.95 all-you-can-eat brunch buffet at West Town pub Mahoney's (551 N. Ogden Ave. 312-733-2121). Mimosas will set you back just $1 a pop, while $4 buys you a trip to the build-your-own bloody mary bar. If you prefer to start a little bit harder, $4 Jameson shots or cocktails and $5 bombs also are on special.

2 Chainz finally gets headlining role

2 Chainz
9 p.m. Fri. at Metro. $26.

2 Chainz's "Based on a T.R.U. Story Tour" (the title of his solo debut) is the first headlining tour for the Atlanta rapper (he was an opener for Drake's "Club Paradise" tour and Nicki Minaj's "Pink Friday" tour). Chainz, whose real name is Tauheed Epps, began his career as a member of Ludacris' Disturbing Da Peace and then was half of the "Duffle Bag Boy" duo Playaz Circle. But the singles playing all over the airwaves from his solo endeavor have put him on the rap map.

Why go: "Based on a T.R.U. Story" is Epps' debut album, but his rise to stardom began with his 2007 mix tape, "Me Against the World," and climbed further with the Kanye West collabo, "Birthday Song."

Reconsider: You've heard, "Riot," "No Lie," etc., etc., and you don't believe the hype.

FEST FRIDAYS

Feeling crafty? German? Thirsty? This weekend lineup has your back

By Kyle Kramer

FOR REDEYE

Sure, Labor Day has come and gone, but that doesn't mean summer festival season is over. In fact, this weekend is one of the busiest of the festival season, from wine-tasting in the heart of downtown to dancing and pierogi-eating in Ukrainian Village, not to mention DIY crowd favorite Renegade Craft Fair and Lincoln Square's biggest outdoor party of the summer, German American Fest.

Catch the opening Bavarian-style beer tapping at 7 p.m. on Friday or grab a Hofbrau and watch folk dancers covering a range of styles from all over Germany on Sunday afternoon.

Festival de La Villita

Meanwhile, music ranges from traditional acts such as Alkatraz de la Sierra to pop artists such as Raul Sandoval and Esmeralda Ugalde.

Learning to fly

By Ryan Smith | FOR REDEYE

Team Carp E Diem's decidedly unscientific methods for building a flying machine would make the Wright Brothers roll in their graves.

The group of five Chicagoans began with a "crude, kindergarten-level sketch" of a stick figure riding a glider. Meanwhile, the five-member team regularly consumes cocktails of Red Bull and vodka while piecing together an 18-foot-long Asian carp craft that consists of a ladder hooked to plastic tubs, cardboard boxes and various other household products.

Team captain Brittyn Vollmar thinks it has the potential to travel 20 feet before smacking into Lake Michigan.

"A lot of this is trial and error," said Vollmar, 27. "We've never made a giant fish before, much less a flying one."

Luckily, breaking flight records isn't the goal of Red Bull Flugtag, (pronounced Floog-tog) a tongue-in-cheek competition the energy drink-maker has organized dozens of times around the world since 1992. For the first time since 2008, the event returns to North Avenue Beach on Saturday, when spectators can watch 28 different squads dress up in themed costumes, perform a short skit set to music and test the air-worthiness of their homemade flying machines by sending them off a 30-foot-high platform into Lake Michigan. The event opens at 11 a.m., and the first flight is at 1 p.m.

Flight distance is part of the game, but creativity and showmanship are just as important to judges. That's good for the Chicago Duck Hunt team, which brags a water fountain designer, beer tour guide, lawyer and computer programmer but no engineers or aviation experts.

"We went online and did some searching to see what has worked in the past for Flugtag," said team captain Manuel Alfaro, 34, of Lincoln Park. "Basically, we did 30 minutes of Googling to make up for our lack of aviation degrees."

Shortly before the June deadline to submit their ideas, Alfaro and crew came up with a plan for a duck and zipper meant to emulate the old Nintendo 8-bit video game "Duck Hunt."

"It was 5 a.m., and after many beers, we just said, 'Yeah, let's do that!' We're all gamers, so we loved the idea," Alfaro said.

Meanwhile, a team consisting of bartenders from Boystown pub Roscoe's has been busy constructing a 9-foot-tall red high heel meant to hold pilot Ricardo Avila, better known as drag queen Frida Lay.

"We just thought it would be funny to push a drag queen into the lake, and what would be more appropriate than a heel?" said captain Brenden Chrisman, 31, of Boystown.

The five-member team, Head Over Heels, doesn't have its skit completely down yet, but Chrisman said it will be set to the song "These Boots Are Made for Walkin'" and will involve four guys in high heels telling Frida Lay how to behave.

"It'll be the ultimate drag show," said Chrisman, who added that hopefully the craft "doesn't just cartwheel straight off" the platform. "On paper, it's going to be huge a success. We'll see."

Is dating a younger man a bad idea?

Anna Pulley

redeye@tribune.com
@annapulley

Dear Anna:

I'm 28, and a young man of 21 has been showing interest in me. I have known him for many years because he lives two blocks away and his parents are friends with mine. I also have a 19-year-old brother who looks up to him. I have been getting to know him, but we have yet to go on a date. I'm nervous about it. I am attracted to him and would like to give him a chance, but sometimes I think this could backfire. He is very focused on school and he works full-time, and from what I know is a really good person. He has always been very mature for his age, which is why I am even considering giving him a chance. He plans on working full-time after graduation and even said he would, "take care of me." He said he was tired of the way younger women act. I'm not sure if I should pursue this! I do have a friend who is 30 and engaged to a 23-year-old, so I'm thinking there may be some hope! Any good advice?

—Cradle-robber?

If he was a rando 21-year-old who you met at a bar, I'd have a different answer for you. But, you've known this fellow for years (and he's already met your parents!), so why not give him a shot? You find him attractive, mature, and he has his [bleep] together, which is pretty darn rare for someone so young. I'm almost 30 and have been using paper towels as toilet paper for the last three days because I've been too lazy to go to the store.

Sometimes we get too bogged down by what we "should" like and who we "should" date. Since women tend to mature faster than men do, "science" tells us to add five years to our current age to even things out in the dating field. But, when was the last time math did anything for your love life? We tend to have laundry lists of mate specifications, and often that list is based on previous people we've dated or relationships we witnessed growing up: Must fit this age range, must be over 5'11", must have freckles, must love dogs, etc. And that's fine—we like what we like, but in this situation, I think you'd be remiss to close yourself off to something potentially awesome and fulfilling because of a number. Besides, seven years isn't THAT crazy. It's not like you'd be dating one of the Rugrats.

One thing: Let's table the whole "I'll take care of you forever" business. That puts an awful lot of pressure on both of you, and you haven't even had one date yet. Take things slow, be cautious, but be open too. Focus less on the "Ah, I'm dating a teenager!" mindset and more on finding out if he's your emotional and spiritual equal. That will serve you far better in the long run.

Our greatest vulnerability in life is when we risk nothing. Take a chance on this guy. You might be wrong, things might backfire, but it's better to be wrong than sorry.

4 SINGLE PEOPLE WHO ROCK

Date Report

In a world where celeb couples are known by a single, overly cutesy moniker, it can be tough being the odd (single) one out. But never fear, even if you're technically flying solo, you're still in amazing company. Consider these four single people who rock.

Gabby Douglas

While most kids her age were tanning, texting or tweeting, this 16-year-old was in London making history as the first African-American woman and first person of color to win gold in the gymnastics individual all-around competition. (And she's single. At press time.)

Robert Pattinson

I realize that he just became single again like two seconds ago but it's his behavior in the aftermath that has me cheering Team Robert all the way.

Katie Holmes

Another newly single celeb who ended her divorce amicably and is apparently still getting residuals from "Dawson's Creek," a show that, by the way, she risked not being cast on because she insisted on performing in her school play.

Prince Harry

Maybe it's just me but he seems kind of like a changeling in the sense that he doesn't quite fit in with the rest of the Royal Family. There's something endearing about that and (of course) there's a lesson as well in the sense that you don't have to be who everyone expects you to be.

ROPE TRICKS

JUMP-ROPE DELIVERS A FULL-BODY WORKOUT

Tribune Newspapers

Jump-ropes aren't just for kids. Adults are turning to this fun activity because it's a great workout that improves timing, coordination, agility and cardiorespiratory endurance. Jumping rope is a total body exercise that involves nearly every major muscle group—but it's still relatively gentle on joints. Two more selling points: It's cheap and it's portable.

Tim Haft, founder of Punk Rope (punkrope.com), jump-rope-based classes offered at fitness studios throughout New York, shared some basic jump-rope exercises that'll whip you into shape.

Before you start: Sure, anyone can grab a jump-rope and start. But in order to make sure you don't get hurt, you need to have the correct rope-jumping posture. Keep your eyes focused straight ahead, not down. Your shoulders should be relaxed and your elbows should remain close to your ribs. Your feet should be parallel and close together, while your weight should be on the balls of your feet.

Jump without the rope

Why: In order to develop rhythm and timing, as well as proper jumping and landing mechanics, you should start by jumping without the rope.

Try it: Keeping your weight on the balls of your feet, push off from your toes. Stay vertical and make a conscious effort not to lean forward or backward. Avoid kicking your heels backward as you elevate, and keep your knees soft on takeoff and landing. Barely leave the ground when you jump—just go high enough to clear the imaginary rope. Land as softly and with as little sound as possible.

Swing the rope

Why: This develops your wrists' circumduction (ability to move in a circular movement).

Try it: Take both handles in one hand, and spin the rope forward by rotating your wrist. As you spin the rope, don't allow it to cross the midline of your body. The rope should strike the ground directly in front of the turning hand. Keep your elbows close to your ribs. Repeat with other hand.

Jump through the rope

Why: You're putting together the previous two skills and raising your heart rate.

Try it: The first turn of the rope should be initiated by your shoulders, and the following turns should be via your wrists. As you jump, your mantra should be: Turn first, jump second. Your jumps should be low and very soft. Try not to kick your heels back to make sure you clear the rope—this will make you tired very quickly, and may lead to sore ankles, hips and knees. The rope is only about ¼-inch thick so jumping high is completely unnecessary.

Scissors

Why: It works different muscles in your legs while getting your heart rate up.

Try it: Start with the basic jump, but instead of landing on both feet, split your feet so that one foot moves forward and the other backward. On the next jump, switch the position of your feet. You should land relatively flat-footed, with a slight bend in your knees. While you jump, imagine your feet are gliding over the ground, and keep your range of motion small at first.

Side straddle

Why: Strengthen your legs while getting a cardio workout.

Try it: From the waist down, the side straddle looks just like a jumping jack. As the rope passes under your feet, move your feet apart. When the rope approaches on the second turn, move your feet back together. This is a two-step jump, so don't try to move your feet apart and back together again in a single jump. Keep your range of motion small at first, especially if you have any knee issues, and don't let your knees collapse in. Your kneecaps should stay aligned with your second and third toes.

Side swing

Why: It gives you a break from jumping while strengthening your arm muscles.

Try it: Grab one handle with each hand. Your hands should be about hip-width apart and level with your belly button, and the tops of your thumbs should face upward. Your elbows are in close to your ribs. If you're right-handed, start by crossing your right hand over your left hand toward your left hip. At the same time, your left hand should move toward your right hip. (If you're left-handed, reverse the move.) The faster you move your hands, the more momentum you'll generate; the more momentum you generate, the more easily the rope will swing. Once you master this move, you can go straight from the side swing into a jump. To do this, wait until your right hand is in front of your left hip. Then, take your right hand up toward your head, across your body, and bring it toward your right hip. This rainbow motion will create a loop you can jump through to start jumping rope again. (You can watch Shana Brady, Punk Rope's director of training, demonstrate the move on YouTube.)

THAT'S ONE HOT WORKOUT

Humidity can turn heat's benefits into hazards

Reuters

When it comes to exercise, some like it hot, some like it hotter, and some like it under the air conditioner.

Experts say heat can help your workout, boosting circulation and increasing flexibility, but it's a relationship that also can turn nasty.

"Your body is engineered to exercise in the heat," said Michele Olson, professor of exercise science at Auburn University at Montgomery, Ala. "This is why we sweat."

Olson, who is also an expert with the American College of Sports Medicine, said it's actually the evaporation of sweat from the skin that cools our bodies to maintain our normal body temperature.

Heat also speeds up the heart rate, increasing blood circulation around the body, including the muscles, decreasing friction and making it more comfortable to stretch, she said.

But heat-related illnesses that strike during a sport or recreational activity send nearly 6,000 people in the U.S. to emergency rooms every year, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Sometimes the problem is really not the heat, but the humidity.

"If it is too humid, sweat cannot evaporate and this can prove dangerous, causing a heat injury such as dehydration, heat cramps or heat stroke," Olson said.

Dr. Cedric X. Bryant, chief science officer of the American Council on Exercise, said it's usually a combination of the two.

"With humidity the environment is not conducive to evaporation, so the body stores more heat, the core temperature goes up, and your

STAY HYDRATED

To beat the heat, Bryant recommends drinking lots of fluid 30 minutes before exercise, drinking at least 6 ounces every 20 minutes during exercise, and drinking beyond thirst after exercise. "Water is generally best," he said. "But consider a sports drink if you're going to be exercising for more than an hour."

physical performance in negatively impacted," he said.

When it's more than 90 degrees Fahrenheit outside and the humidity is 60 percent, he said exercise should be indoors. At 90 degrees and 30 percent humidity, you'd still be able to exercise safely, he said, depending on the intensity of the workout, which determines how much heat is produced.

"Generally speaking if temperature is 80 degrees and humidity is below 50 percent, that's going to be pretty comfortable," Bryant said.

Acclimatization, the gradual adaptation to environmental changes such as heat, can also reduce risk of injury, according to Bryant. The body usually takes 10 to 14 days of heat-exposed exercise to adapt.

During the hottest days, Bryant suggests working out in the morning, before the day heats up, and protecting skin and eyes with sunscreen and sunglasses.

Hallmark Channel's 'I Married Who?'

Whom cares?

Hallmark movie drives another nail in coffin of dying pronoun 'whom'

The Kansas City Star

To whom it may concern: We're not all that concerned with the proper use of "who" and "whom" anymore.

Oh sure, it was important to Ernest Hemingway when he wrote "For Whom the Bell Tolls" more than 70 years ago. We still teach "whom" in high school and use it as a salutation in letters to unknown recipients. And we might drop an "Ask not for whom the bell tolls, it tolls for thee," misquote of a John Donne poem into casual conversation.

But, you know, whom really cares, right?

In the world of Twitter and texting, "whom" is archaic, a grammatical anachronism. Even the Hallmark Channel, a division of the Kansas City company that made its fortune with words, is giving up. Hallmark is promoting the Oct. 20 premiere of an original movie called "I Married Who?"

It should be "I Married Whom?" The Hallmark Channel knows this. It just doesn't care. There's a good reason.

"I Married Whom?" sounds stupid. It's not colloquial. It's not—natural.

Cut to preposterous movie scene:

(A knock comes at the door.)

"Who is it?"

"It is I, Reginald. Thou truly wast in thy cups last night, Catherine, but didst thou realizeth thou wedded the court jester?"

"Zounds! I married whom?"

See? Stupid. Or at least cringingly British.

Michelle Vicary, the Hallmark Channel's executive vice president of programming, said the title for "I Married Who?" needed to be fun, conversational and "relatable" to reflect the movie's contemporary story, about a bride-

RIGHT BUT WRONG

Many well-known songs and phrases use the incorrect "who," but who could argue in favor of these grammar fixes?

"Whom Do You Love?"

"Two, four, six, eight, whom do we appreciate?"

"Who Made Whom?"

"Who's Zoomin' Whom?"

"Whom ya gonna call? Ghostbusters!"

to-be, a Vegas bachelorette party and an inadvertent marriage to a movie star.

Make it too stilted and nobody watches. In other words, ask not for whom the bell tolls, it tolls for "whom."

It's a grammatical death knell.

You certainly won't find "whom" on many, if any, Hallmark cards.

"Greeting cards are about what people want to say to each other, so they have to reflect what's going on in the culture and the language," spokeswoman Linda Odell said.

Why is "whom" dying? Beyond sounding stuffy, it's hard for many to understand when to use it.

Here's the general rule: Use "who" when it is the subject of a sentence or clause—the one taking the action, as in "Who loves you?" Use "whom" when it is the object of a sentence or clause—the recipient of the action, as in "Whom do you love?"

Got it? No? See the problem?

Jennifer Frangos, assistant professor of English at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, knows "whom" is facing an uphill battle.

"Yes, it may get to the point where nobody remembers the rules or why the distinctions are important," she said. "But until then, it's incumbent upon those of us for whom the distinctions are important to continue to raise the issues."

Missy Franklin

That dress is not the most flattering in the chestal region, but who cares when you're 17 and rockin' Olympic gold? Not pictured: eight bodyguards.

RuPaul

It's always a surprise when RuPaul shows up as a man—and even more surprising when he rocks the mandals. We're big fans of those pants.

Wiz Khalifa and Amber Rose

Amber is one lady we definitely like better bald, but a baby bump sure does improve an outfit. Best of luck, you crazy kids.

Rihanna

Surprise! Ri-Ri unveils a new coil, and... well, it's better than her giant red curls. Ease up on the hair product and spike this action up a bit, and we've got ourselves a winner! We are, however, reminded of just how gorgeous her face is.

Miley Cyrus

SERIOUSLY. If you're going to come at it with the Eraserhead hair, bring some kind of killer, grungy-ass punk look with it. Don't think your ladypillows are going to help things.

The VMAs red carpet brought some fierce new looks

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Thursday's MTV Video Music Awards were going to have to work pretty hard to top 2011. Last year's red carpet featured Beyonce snuggling her baby bump, prompting somewhere around 9 million people to lose their minds. This year's attendees tried to up the shock value, with mixed results. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

Going their Direction?

One Direction took home the first Moon Man of the night at Thursday's MTV Video Music Awards, winning best pop video for "What Makes You Beautiful." The boy band beat Rihanna, who opened the show with a mash-up of her songs and a balloon drop straight out of the political conventions.

in character

Jimmy Kimmel is having a laugh with the Emmys. The late-night host, who will host the Sept. 23 show, did a photo shoot with TV Guide magazine dressed as characters from nominated shows. He appears on four covers of Monday's issue.

Face forward

Katie Holmes on Wednesday made her first official public appearance since divorcing Tom Cruise, at the Style

Awards in New York. Holmes was announced as the face of Bobbi Brown cosmetics, a role for which she'll reportedly make between $2 million and $3 million.

THE DIGIT

$2K+

How much Alana Thompson, aka Honey Boo Boo Child, and her family make per episode of the hit TLC show, "Here Comes Honey Boo Boo." According to thr.com, the family is rumored to make between $2,000 and $4,000 per episode.

Not funny

Breaking up is hard to do ... but it's even worse when it's two of our favorite funny peeps. Will Arnett and Amy Poehler, who have two sons, are separating after nine years of marriage, their rep confirmed to people.com. Excuse us while we break out some ice cream and tissues.

'X Factor' vs. 'The Voice'

"X Factor" creator Simon Cowell is miffed that NBC has breached a "gentleman's agreement" by deciding to air an extra episode of "The Voice" on Sept. 12, pitting it against "X Factor's" season premiere on Fox. "This is a cynical, cold-hearted, unprofessional way of doing business," he told TMZ. Oh, bummer.
